For budding economists: There is another alternative available to you: Math with Econ specialization. This requires you to take more math classes than the ones listed above, but if you are considering it, it's better to start on the above, then decide whether you want to stop at the point necessary for Econ or go further and do Math with Econ.

There are other majors (such as political science) that don't strictly require you to take Math 195, but where this class will count towards your list of approved non-major courses. I'm not including specific questions dealing with these other majors in the quiz here.
